| Project Title: (56 characters max) | Trauma Informed Career Counseling |
| Hypothesis: | Integrating Supported Employment/Supported Education (SE/SEd) and PTSD treatment has the potential to improve services to persons with mental health conditions with comorbid PTSD. This proposed study for individuals with psychiatric disabilities seeks to translate new knowledge on trauma informed career counseling into practice. The overall objective of this summer project is to help public rehabilitation service systems maximizing opportunities for successful community participation for people with psychiatric disabilities by helping individuals with undiagnosed and untreated PTSD to achieve optimal educational/employment outcomes. |
| Description: (Include design, methodology, data collection, techniques, data analysis to be employed, evaluation and interpretation methodology for research component) | The existing dataset will be analyzed using SPSS as well as SAS in order to develop the main outcome manuscript. Specific tasks would involve preparing references, analyzing the main outcome data under the supervision of Dr. Lu, and preparing tables for publication. The student agrees to meet with Dr. Lu on average once a week in order to be supervised for the data analysis portion of the research work. |

|------------------------------------|---|
| Specific Student Responsibilities: | Student will be trained in utilizing SPSS as well as SAS to analyze data. The student will analyze the main outcome data and assist with the development of the main outcome manuscript. Student will make tables and prepare results section for publication under supervision. Students with computer science expertise can help with the development of a website that seeks to translate research findings into practice. |
